15. Read the following passage and answer the questions below :

The year 1967 is considered as a landmark year in India's political and electoral history. The Congress Party remained a dominant force throughout the country from 1952 onwards. This trend was to undergo significant changes with the 1967 elections. It was in the context of heightened popular discontent and the polarisation of popular forces that the 4th general elections of the Lok Sabha and State Assemblies were held in Feb. 1967. The results jolted the Congress at both the National and State levels. Many contemporary political observers described the elections as a political earthquake.
